The Brand Audit

7 questions to find exactly what your brand is missing, and what to do about it.

Most brands are not failing because the work is bad. They are failing because the brand is unclear, inconsistent, or invisible. This audit walks you through the seven questions that separate a brand people remember from one they scroll past, with a score for each and the fix if you come up short.

How to use this guide

Answer each question honestly and score it 0 to 3: 0 means it is not true at all, 3 means it is fully true and consistent. Add your seven scores at the end. Be the stranger looking at your brand for the first time, not the founder who already knows the story.

1. Can a stranger tell what you do in 5 seconds?

This is clarity, and it is the single most expensive thing to get wrong. If someone lands on your page or profile and cannot say what you offer and who it is for before they lose interest, nothing else you do matters.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: vague taglines like 'we do it all', a logo with no context, a bio that talks about passion instead of the service, a homepage that leads with a mood instead of a message.

What to do

The fix: write one sentence in plain language that names the offer and the audience ('custom branding and web design for artists and growing businesses'). Put it where people look first. A professional brand and web build makes that first impression deliberate instead of accidental.

2. Does your brand look the same everywhere people find you?

Consistency is trust. When your logo, colors, type, and tone change from your site to your socials to your print materials, the audience reads it as smaller and less reliable than you are.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: three different logo files in use, colors that drift between platforms, one channel that looks designed and another that looks like a template, no real type system.

What to do

The fix: lock a small, usable identity kit (logo set, color codes, two typefaces, tone rules) and apply it everywhere. A branding package gives you the kit; the discipline is applying it.

3. Does your visual identity stand out in your own feed?

Distinctiveness is what makes you get picked. If your work looks like the ten accounts beside it, price becomes the only difference, and price is a race you do not want to win.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: trends copied without a point of view, generic stock imagery, a color palette that matches trend pages rather than your brand, design that could belong to anyone.

What to do

The fix: build one or two signature elements (a color, a composition, a treatment) and use them relentlessly. Custom design work exists precisely to give you a look that is yours, not a template's.

4. Does your website convert, or does it just exist?

A site that loads and looks fine is not the goal. The goal is a visitor taking the next step: booking, buying, or getting in touch. Pretty and passive is a leak.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: no clear call to action above the fold, slow load, broken mobile layout, pricing hidden or confusing, a contact path that takes more than one tap.

What to do

The fix: one primary action per page, repeated, with friction removed. A web design and build pass should make the path to contact obvious on a phone in seconds.

5. Do you have content that proves the work, not just claims it?

Proof beats promises. Testimonials, before-and-after, real project photos, and case studies do the selling you cannot do yourself. No proof reads as no experience.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: an empty or stale portfolio, low-quality photos, no client words, no results shown, a gallery that has not changed in a year.

What to do

The fix: shoot or gather one strong proof set and keep it fresh. Professional photography and content production feed this engine, and an ongoing plan keeps it from going stale.

6. Does your messaging speak to one person, or to everyone?

Positioning is choosing. A brand for everyone is a brand for no one. Sharp positioning makes the right people feel seen and the wrong people self-select out, which is a feature.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: 'for anyone who needs X', audiences described as 'everyone', copy that lists features instead of the outcome a specific person wants.

What to do

The fix: name your core customer and their problem, then speak only to that. A brand strategy session turns a scattershot message into a focused one.

7. Do you have a system to keep it all moving?

Brands decay without maintenance. Most founders do the big push, then the work goes quiet, the visuals drift, and momentum dies. Systems, not motivation, keep it alive.

Signs you are scoring low

Weak signals: posting in bursts then vanishing, no content calendar, no consistent offer, design requests piling up with no plan.

What to do

The fix: a repeatable rhythm. A monthly creative plan covers design, content, and strategy on a schedule so the brand compounds instead of resetting.

Score your brand

Add the seven scores (each 0 to 3). Maximum 21.

Score	What it means	Your next move
18 to 21	Strong brand. You are ahead of most.	Keep the system running and scale what works.
13 to 17	Solid base, real gaps.	Fix the one or two lowest questions first.
7 to 12	Shaky ground. Growth is leaking.	Prioritize clarity and consistency, then proof.
0 to 6	Start here.	A full brand pass: identity, web, and proof together.
